

Information for authors: Papers should be short, but complete and essentially final reports. FEBS Letters is not a vehicle for publication of preliminary or fragmentary observations, or for reports that are scientifically sound but do not warrant urgent publication or that are only addressed to a specialised readership. As a rule, we do not publish the following: cloning and sequencing of a cDNA or a gene that has previously been reported for another species; conventionally achieved expression of a protein; incomplete NMR or other spectroscopic assignments; conventionally achieved crystallization of a protein; or just negative observations. Methodological papers are normally not published, unless they are truly novel and significant. The overriding criterion is that a paper must be of sufficient immediate importance to justify urgent publication.

Preparation of manuscripts: see our "Notes to Authors" on the internet at <http://www.FEBSLetters.org>. All manuscripts should be submitted online at: <http://febsletters.manuscriptcentral.com>.

Proofs will be sent by e-mail (PDF proofs). The corresponding authors are requested to check the proofs and return any corrections within 48 hours. Thereafter, proofs will be processed and included in the first available issue. Late corrections cannot be accepted. If the authors wish to introduce extensive changes (at the issue manager's discretion) the proofs will be sent back to the accepting editor and the article treated as a resubmission of the original manuscript. Of course this will lead to a severe delay in publication.

For enquiries of manuscripts in press please contact FebsLettersIM@elsevier.com.

Website: The journal website <http://www.FEBSLetters.org> provides access to the full text of all articles published since Volume 1 issue 1 (July 1968). With the exception of selected free content, a subscription is required to view the most recent regular articles (no older than 12 months – free access after 12 months).

Review articles or Special Issues: FEBS Letters is interested in publishing three to four Special Issues per year in addition to our normal biweekly publication. Special Issues could consist of manuscripts focused on either (1) opportune topics of sufficient general interest; or (2) coverage of significant meetings/conferences. Please contact Patricia McCabe (patricia.mccabe@urz.uni-heidelberg.de) at the FEBS Letters Editorial Office in Heidelberg if you have ideas or suggestions for future Special Issues in our journal.

Requests for Permission to Reproduce Material from Published Articles: Authors or a third party wishing to reproduce figures, tables or brief quotations from the text of articles published in FEBS Letters for non-commercial purposes may do so, providing the original publication is acknowledged accordingly and the authors' approval is obtained. No special permission is needed from either FEBS, the Publisher or the Managing Editor for this. If authors or a third party wish to use a major part of an article or an entire article elsewhere, whether in English or in an translation, permission must be asked from the Publisher, who will if necessary contact FEBS, the copyright holder.
